Dave,

Regarding the "so-called experts", pray tell, are you foolish enough to consider the party magicians to be better qualified? Do you really think trying to demean people who are head and shoulders above you in expertise amounts to anything but a lack of credibility and character on your part? Real scientists and experts don't attempt to belittle their equals, only jealous, insecure and unqualified people do. Thanks for clearly indicating which group you belong to.

The fact that you, and the rest of the circus crew, are non-responsive to the already well established documentation by real scientific experts just demonstrates your ineptitude and amateurishness, and the mean-spiritedness of attacking a man and his work without having done your own homework. That isn't science, it's pathetic pomposity conducted by biased, agenda driven fools bent on nothing more than preserving their tiny world view and slandering those who to dare to bust their little bubbles.

It's been fun, it really has but the cat's out of the bag and a whole busload of bozo skeptics aren't going to be able to put it back in. The Meier case is authentic, not because I say so but because real scientists, using real equipment have determined it to be and because copyrighted books and documents don't lie, just people like Randi and his cohorts do, which apparently includes you.

The party magicians and tricksters, who would prevent humanity from knowing the truth to satisfy their inflated, flatulent egos, have had their day. That day is over. They blew whatever credibility they had by failing to meet the challenge they accepted and by humiliating themselves before an international radio audience who saw through their charade, or as Randi might prefer, their farce. You want more testing? Let's start with the photos of the UFO models from CFI-West, who ran from that challenge with their tails between their legs. And where's the film, you know, the "easily duplicated hoax" that we've also been waiting more than three years for? Pathetic!

None of these clowns, and so far you as well, have ever responded to the scientific experts and the detailed evaluation of the evidence simply because they can't. You can't either. They're inept pseudo-scientists, and liars, who thought they had an easy mark because they're so pathetically lazy they never did their homework. I did mine. You should have done some too before shooting your big mouth off. Typical of the bogus skeptical agenda is the "if we didn't see it it doesn't exist" nonsense, invalidating 99.999999% of humanity's history and experience as it does. Yes, let's keep raising the bar, a nice little delay tactic that might have worked in the past but, well, it's just too late for that now.

None of you guys have the integrity to admit that you're wrong, therefore, no credibility. Maybe though, some of these geniuses might eventually want to get on the side of truth, no matter that it contradicts their cultic little belief systems or lets some air out of their egos (and maybe their funding). It would be nice but it doesn't matter to the case and the, now ever unfolding, public awareness of the Meier contacts.

Actually, you should be ashamed of yourself for participating in this kind of fraudulent and deceitful nonsense. You show yourself, like the rest of the pack, to be without credibility or character.

Perhaps you've heard about how the church treated Galileo, or other fine examples of bigoted, fearful, human ignorance throughout history. Well, consider yourselves part of that same church.

So, do yourself a favor, restrain your impulse to do battle, especially since you're unarmed. And consider that maybe you've thrown your lot in with a rather pathetic bunch of know-it-alls and bullies who picked on the wrong kid on the block.

Well, Hi "Mike." Two small points: I goofed yesterday when I wrote "If you're so good with words, Mr. Horn, may I suggest you look up 'hoax' and 'fraud' in the dictionary." What I *meant* to say was "If you're so good with words, Mr. Horn, may I suggest you look up 'hoax' and 'FARCE' in the dictionary." Sorry if this caused confusion. My bad.

Re your so-called experts, the only way to really settle the dispute is by doing some real science on the alleged artifacts. It's quite clear that the JREF million-dollar prize requires, first, agreement on proper scientific tests and protocol, and second, the performance of such tests, and third, verification of the claimed paranormal phenomenon. You haven't even got to first base. You expect Randi to fork over a million smackers because you say somebody already did the test, and just to take your word for it?

That's not how science works.

If you're not willing to belly up to the bar to have your claims honestly tested, then perhaps there's nothing to them. Nothing at all.

Sincerely, Dave

Just call me Mike, Dave. Why don't we see who's telling the truth and who isn't.

Since Mr. Amazing isn't known for his debunking of comedies it's reasonable to conclude that he's saying that the case isn't real, authentic, genuine, etc. After all anyone "can see through it", according to him. Seems pretty clear to me. And then the coward goes and retracts it! Then he lies about my claiming to have metal samples.

Of course, maybe I misunderstood and he now wants to clarify his position and again say the case is a hoax and again fail to prove it. Fail to prove his slander again, Dave.

As for a "real scientific test", pardon me if I point out that you and the whole bunch of phonies and poseurs are so full of material due for elimination that you're truly laughable.

Now, one more time, let's see how you avoid dealing with the following, just go ahead and pretend that you don't see this...then, once again, you won't have to respond. I've got
